

Caring for the Needs Next Door

David Wilkerson (1931-2011) January 22, 2020

During his time on the earth, Jesus was the embodiment of God's compassion. Scripture frequently says that Christ "was moved with compassion" by the suffering of people (see Matthew 14:14).

Most Christians would like to think that they are compassionate. But even the worst sinners are "moved" when they hear of the suffering of children. Compassion is not just pity or sympathy. True compassion compels us to act.

We read of Jesus: "When He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion for them, because they were weary and scattered, like sheep having no shepherd" (Matthew 9:36). The phrase "moved with compassion" here means, "stirred to action." So what did Jesus do about it? He didn't just talk. No, his heart was stirred at what he saw and he had a consuming desire to change things.

"Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people" (9:35). This was not some vain theology. Jesus didn't just get alone with the Father and say, "Father, send laborers into your harvest." He went himself! He laid hands on lepers and got deeply, practically, intimately involved.

We read, "Whoever has this world's goods, and sees his brother in need, and shuts up his heart from him, how does the love of God abide in him?" (1 John 3:17). As you look around and see human need, your compassionate heart should cry out, "God, what do you want me to do?" We should not have to travel any farther than our own neighborhood to find needs that we can help to meet.

God wants you to be a part of his compassionate heart to the world. If you are truly willing to do that, he will send needs right to your doorstep. So present yourself to the Lord to be used and watch him open many doors for you.
